

Rabbi Peter Schweitzer's Ten Passover Tweets for 2011

Only 140 characters to tell the Exodus story. That should be enough. We went from slavery to liberation. Now let's eat.

Does the wine have to be Manischewitz? We prefer a Priorat from Spain. But don't let Uncle Fred get drunk again or is that also tradition?

The secret to making matzoh balls float is selzer. It also gets out wine stains on Grandma's tablecloth.

What makes this tweet different than all other tweets? Isn't it time to update the four questions?

New on the seder plate this year: free-trade coffee. Side-by-side with the new Maxwell House haggadah. Go figure.

Jarred horseradish is for wimps, especially the red kind. Eat the fresh root. Let the tears flow. Also guaranteed to open your sinuses.

What is the inflation-adjusted value for the afikomen this year? Can it still be worth only a dollar?

The Egyptians just overthrew a modern-day Pharaoh and the Jews didn't get blamed for it. What's the world coming to?

If we only had our smart phones, if we only had our iPads, if we only had our social networking, DAYENU.

How can Passover be about freedom when you have to slave in the kitchen? Next year at a restaurant.
